Tri-Cities Recovery Helping to Establish Other Programs

It is no secret that the drug epidemic in Southwest Virginia is poisoning our communities. A daily review of the local news will no doubt reveal the latest in drug busts. Articles such as "80 Arrested During Drug Round Up" can be cause for concern - or, it can be a call to share the gospel.

TCR Director Mark Mitchell is helping neighboring churches form Living Free Teams so the gospel can be carried further!

Tis so Sweet, to Trust in Jesus

It is a beautiful thing to know and trust in Jesus. To call Him Savior, Lord, and Friend. To Destiny Mays, Jesus is all of these things, and the beauty of the relationship she shares with Christ is evident on her face.

Once bound by addiction, Destiny has laid aside the shame and pain that once characterized her life, and is now pursuing her purpose in God.

Destiny came from what she calls "a broken and dysfunctional family." Introduced to marijuana at the age of 11 and crystal meth at the age of 13, Destiny spent most of her teen years in and out of juvenile detention. She left the foster care system at the age of 18 and found herself forced into prostitution. Not being able to live with the shame she felt, she cried out to God for help and was soon arrested.

After her arrest, Destiny served time at the Abingdon Regional Jail where she met Tri-Cities Recovery Director Mark Mitchell. Destiny was broken, desperate, ashamed, and afraid. TCR staff told Destiny about a residential program called Teen Challenge. At a crossroads in her life, Destiny made the decision to pursue the Teen Challenge program where she met someone who would forever change her life - i.e. Jesus.

Destiny's story is real, and many in our communities face the same pain that Destiny faced every day. Thankfully, Destiny's story has transformed into one of redemption and restoration. Destiny is now employed, enrolled in community college, has a home church, is rediscovering relationships with her family, and feels called into the ministry. Help us help others, by giving to this cause.
